

LEE CRUZE INAUGURATED GOVERNOR OF OKLAHOMA

proper spirit, is useful and helpful, and I shall try to profit by it. If I merit your commendation, an expression of your approval will be appreciated, and will help to lighten the load I must bear and make smooth the way I must travel.

"I shall not here undertake to define, in detail, my policies for the future. I will only say this much. It shall be my purpose to work incessantly for the good of the masses of Oklahoma's citizenship, and for the greatest possible development of the resources of the state. To the timorous investor abroad I want to send this message: As long as I am governor of Oklahoma, your investments in this state, if they are honest investments, and made in observance of our laws, will be as sacredly observed and safeguarded here as anywhere on the face of the earth. Capital and labor should be friends. Both are sorely needed in the future development of the state, and neither shall unduly oppress or harass the other if I can prevent it. More railroads with better equipment; more factories with better appliances; greater development of our vast mineral resources, with greater safety to employees; more employment of labor with better wages; an educational system meeting the modern needs of an advanced citizenship; a continual development of the agricultural interests; giving greater comfort and happiness to the farmers of the state, will be the slogan for Oklahoma for the next four years.

"My politics is well known to you all. I was elected as a democrat, but I shall not be a partisan in the administration of the affairs of the state. I shall look at all times to the greatest good to all the people. Under no conditions will I sacrifice the welfare of the public to the interest of any political organization. In appointing men to office, merit and honesty alone will govern me. If I make a mistake in the appointment of any man to office, that mistake, as soon as it is discovered, will be promptly corrected by the removal of the incompetent or corrupt official.

"I think I will trespass a few minutes further upon your time, by referring to my future attitude towards the prohibition law, in this state. I have so repeatedly stated that I favor the enforcement of every law upon the statute books, that it would seem needless for me to repeat here that declaration. But our people have so consistently fought over the prohibition laws of the state that I feel that a special reference to that law is desired by the public. While I am governor, every power given into my hands by the legislature and the people of the state, will be exhausted in an endeavor to give to the people an honest and effective enforcement of that law. I am not a fanatic on the question of prohibition, and no fanaticism will be exhibited by me in attempting to enforce that law; but so long as it remains one of the laws of this state, in the discharge of my sworn duties I will attempt faithfully to enforce it. In this endeavor I am entitled to the active help and support of every citizen who believes in law enforcement. Twice the people have decided in favor of that law, and it is certainly entitled to as much consideration, on the question of enforcement as any other law in this state. To those who purposely violate this law, I want to give this warning: You must pay the penalty which the law imposes. Don't violate the law, harboring the hope that you will find an escape through the demerol of a pardon, from the penalty you have voluntarily and wilfully incurred. This much the governor can do to aid in the enforcement of the law—he can make certain the punishment after conviction by withholding a pardon. If you violate this law, you had better defeat the case against you in the court, for you will stand little chance to defeat justice after conviction by obtaining a pardon at my hands.

"And now, my fellow citizens, let us set ourselves to the work to be performed—the building of an ideal commonwealth! a commonwealth of comfortable homes and contented people; where every man shall reap and enjoy the fruits of his toil; where capital shall find safe and profitable investment without oppressing the poor; where virtue shall be exalted and vice abased; where there shall be a realization of the hope of ages and the dream of the past, "a government of the people for the people and by the people." This cannot be accomplished in a year, nor four years, but we can start the forces moving that will tend to that end. In this field there is need for all, and the man who withholds his help is not a friend to Oklahoma.

"Implore your help, and with a firm reliance upon Him who has been the friend and preserver of our nation in the generations of the past, and who will aid us in the future, if we but place our trust in Him, I enter upon the duties of the office determined to do my best to merit the confidence reposed in me by the people in electing me to be their governor."

"Paid in Full."

Eugene Walter's great play of modern New York, "Paid in Full," holds an extraordinary place in dramatic criticism. It stands alone as the only play that has been universally praised by dramatic critics in every city where it has been seen. This fact establishes its exceptional power and worth, and is apart from the evidence furnished by the 2,500,000 persons who have seen it, far more than ever have witnessed any other play in a like time. Such unvarying tribute from dramatic critics as has been given to "Paid in Full" is unprecedented.

Many plays have been generally commended, though against all of these a critic's pen now and then has dissented from popular opinion. Not so with "Paid in Full." In New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and all leading cities of this country, and equally in the smaller ones, wherever "Paid in Full" has been played, it has swept all dramatic writers to highest enthusiasm. Everyone has written it down as the greatest play of the age. A striking feature of this praise, which emphasizes the play's tremendous appeal and its genuine quality, is that it has been bestowed with corresponding warmth on all five of the companies appearing in "Paid in Full." This is convincing proof that it is truly a great play. Allen Dale, the world-famed critic of the New York American, said, "The photographic power displayed in the characterization of the men and women in 'Paid in Full' is the most commanding thing I have ever seen. It is a revelation, and Eugene Walter, the author, and the United Play company, the producers, are to be congratulated for giving to the American stage so valuable a property."

This famous play will be at the Auditorium January 23, when the United Play company will present it with a notable New York cast. The engagement is the most attractive theatrical announcement of the season.
